QUICK SUMMARY FOR PEOPLE SEEKING HELP

1-Mar-21

If you are struggling emotionally, psychotherapy can help.

What is psychotherapy?

Psychotherapy focuses on finding ways out of difficult situations, reducing distress and regaining emotional stability.

Choosing a therapist

When choosing a therapist or counsellor, I suggest asking yourself whether you like the therapist enough to share deeply personal things with them.

At the first appointments

The first 1-3 sessions usually involve with talking about what is happening in your life - including emotionally. It's also important to hear about what you would like to get out of sessions. I then offer my suggestions about what therapy may involve, so that you can decide whether to continue. The first session also involves completion of an Outcome Questionnaire, which is one way progress will be measured.

How long will it take?

Often in talking through problems, some distress lifts. Some people decide that a short piece of therapy is enough – even six sessions can help – although this most likely would not be enough to make large and lasting changes. You can decide how much work to do – your intention may not be to resolve all problems, but to complete enough of a “chunk” of work to make a difference. If you are very distressed, the therapy usually takes longer.
